

Dear Mr. Sasges,

... Wow. This has taken me almost 2 months to come up with. I wanted to do this since before this book was even suggested to the class, but I never knew what to say. I probably still don't, but hopefully you'll be able to make some sense out of it.

As I wander down a desolate path,
Nearly every face turns away,
As I struggle to make it on my own,
The loneliness leaves me in dismay,
But as the world turns from dusk to dawn,
And the sun brings in a new day,
I think back to how scared I was,
When you asked me to wander another way,
You asked me to venture beyond my limit,
You asked me to look deep inside,
You asked me to tell everyone everything,
To the point of which I even cried,
Some of the classmates may have changed,
And some of the classmates may have not,
But when I remember what happened,
Change was the only thing I sought,
You helped me get past the obstacles,
You helped me another step to my goals,
You helped me even when I didn't want it,
You helped me in every one of my roles,
You were always there whenever I asked,
You never raised yourself to higher ranks,
You would always do anything for me,
But I don't think I ever said this... Thanks.

Thank you Mr. Sasges.

Sincerely,

Daniel
